HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

For SMID, the top two detractors over the period were Grocery Outlet and Pacific Biosciences. GO's material detractor over the last year has been due primarily to a disruptive ERP installation that temporarily reduced the company's ability to track inventory in real time across its network of stores. This temporary headwind has now been lapped and the company has provided a constructive framework for 2025 expected operating performance. Pacific Bioscience's underperformance has been tied to end market issues. Specifically, decision cycles and budget constraints for academic labs as well as weakness in China have hindered sales of genomics capital equipment. The top contributors were Howmet Aerospace and Wix. Both companies executed well and drive outsized operating margin expansion in the face of stagnant end market conditions. With recent exuberance returning to the market, SMID's defensive attributes have kept the portfolio from trailing an index that is approximately 45% comprised of companies not earning profits. As the speculative fervor from expected rate cuts and a Trump election fades, we expect market focus to return to fundamentals.
